

Once again the people have spoken and big radio, just like the RIAA want to squash anyone with a new, better, way of doing something. If it wasn't something that people wanted and there wasn't a demand for it then it will die anyway. Let satellite radio fill the need and let local competitors compete with new inovative ideas of their own and let the best man win. They're (the established system) always tries to stiffle inovation while trying to protect an antiquated way of doing something. It's new and exciting technology.....when will anyone ever learn that there is always something new coming and they need to adapt or get out of the way.

Thank you